The S&P traded a very tight range yesterday. The market held the 1170.00-71.00 intra-day resistance area and the 1165.0 handle on the down-side. This morning, equity markets traded higher first thing with the S&P trading up to the 1173.00 handle before easing back from here. Further bid activity above here and then the 1175.75-76.50 resistance should signal another leg higher for the market, with the key 11000 handle in the Dow Jones being a major focus point for US participants. With the coming end of quarter, the market may try to get a print at this level. Short term support at the 1147.00 underpins the market's strength. Bears will need to force a firm break below here before they can look to turn the tide of the market.
