The EuroStoxx retraced the best part of Friday's rally yesterday. The market had initially seen some positivity however the market failed around the 2652 level before steadily selling off over the course of the day. Although volumes were thin in observance of the UK holiday. US equity markets saw some steep losses going into the close which may feed into the early part of today's trade. Bears must look to take out the 2652-67 support area in order to force a drill down going into the rest of the week. They must also make some down side progress in order to prevent the loss of inertia. The loss of inertia at highs and lows has been a major reason for equity market swings over the last 4 months. Bulls must protect the current support area otherwise face a deterioration to the 2500 handle. The 2652 level is now an important immediate term reference point and a move above here may be necessary soon if bulls are to avoid another rout.
